Sapiens: A Brief History of Humankind is a history book by Yuval Noah Harari, first published in Hebrew in Israel in 2011 and based on a series of lectures given by Harari at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Most books on the history of mankind follow a historical or biological approach, but Dr. Yuval Noah Harari breaks the mold with this very original book that began about 70,000 years ago with the appearance of modern cognition. From examining the role human beings have played in the global ecosystem to mapping the rise of empires, Sapiens integrates history and science to rethink accepted narratives, link past developments with contemporary concerns, and examine specific events in the context of broader ideas. Doctor... Harari also forces us to look forward, because in the last few decades human beings have begun to bend the laws of natural selection that have governed life for the last four billion years. We are gaining the ability to design not only the world around us, but also ourselves. Where does this take us, and what do we want to become? New York Times Bestseller A choice of summer reading for President Barack Obama, Bill and Mark Zuckerberg From a renowned historian comes a groundbreaking narrative of the creation and evolution of humanity – a number 1 international bestseller – exploring the ways biology and history have defined and enhanced our understanding of what it means to be “human.” One hundred thousand years ago, at least six different species of human beings inhabited the Earth. Yet today there is only one à homo sapiens. What happened to the others? And what can happen to us? Most books on the history of mankind pursue a historical or biological approach, but Dr. Yuval Noah Harari breaks the mold with this very original book that begins about 70,000 years ago with the aspect of modern cognition. By examining the role that evolving humans have played in the global ecosystem in charting the rise of empires, Sapiens integrates history and science to reconsider accepted narratives, link past developments with contemporary concerns, and examine specific events within the context of larger ideas. Dr. Harari also forces us to look forward, because in the last few decades human beings have begun to bend laws of natural selection that have governed life for the last four billion years. We are gaining the ability to design not only the world around us, but also ourselves. Where is it taking us, and what do we want to be? With 27 photographs, 6 maps and 25 illustrations/diagrams, this provocative and intuitive work is sure to spark debate and is essential reading for fans of Jared Diamond, James Gleick, Matt Ridley, Robert Wright and Sharon Moalem. Let's face it: 2020 was a nightmare. Between political discontent and the pandemic coronavirus (COVID-19) novel, it's hard to look back at the year and find something, something, that was a potential bright spot on an otherwise turbulent journey around the sun. Fortunately, there have been some bright spots: for example, some of the excellent works of military history and analysis, fiction and non-fiction, novels and graphic novels that we have absorbed over the past year. Here's a short list of some of the best books we've read here at Task & Finale over the past year. Do you have a recommendation? Send an email to jared@taskandpurpose. Com and we will include it in a future story. Missionaries by Phil Klay I loved Phil Klay's first book, Redemption (which won the National Book Award), so Missionaries were high on my list now-law when it came out in October. It took six years to search for and write the book, which follows four characters in Colombia joining the shadow of our post-11 wars. As Klay's prophetic novel shows, the machinery of technology, drones and targeted killings that was built on the battlefield of the Middle East will continue to grow in lands of great influence that rarely garner titles.
