In this tutorial, you'll learn how to lock columns in Google Sheets. When collaborating on spreadsheets, it is often necessary to prevent certain users from modifying data into parts of the worksheet. For example, you can allow users to insert raw data into certain cells, but they block other cells containing cells so that the form is not accidentally overwritten. The cells of the large should be locked to prevent the accidental editing. Google sheets allows to block or protect a range of cells or a whole sheet. If you choose to protect a range, this range can be any size, from a single cell to the entire sheet. Because protected tracks work protected tracks should be used to avoid accidental issues, but not as a security measure. Users can still print the spreadsheet, copy and paste data from the protected range(s), and even create duplicates of the worksheet where they have full access to all the data. Only share spreadsheets with users who must have access to all the data contained in that worksheet. How to protect a range to protect a range on Google sheets: Step 1 Select the range, and then open the data menu. Scroll down to the protected sheets and track option and click on it; Step 2 The protected sheets and side strings will appear; Step 3 In the sidebar, you can add an optional description to the range. Edit the range to ensure that you are protecting the right cells. Click the Green Set Permissions button and the Permissions menu box for gamma edition permissions will appear; Step 4 Select whether you want to restrict who can edit the users of the range or warn the range (more information about these options below) Step 5 Click Completion and The Restricted Restricted track that can edit that range with this protection option, you can choose who can The protected interval. By pattern, only you and the owner of the worksheet can edit the interval, or only you if you are the owner of the worksheet. You can also choose specific users by the custom option. Show a warning when editing this range if you do not select this option, all users who edit the range will see a warning; they can decide whether they want to cancel the edit or proceed with the edit. To edit or remove range: Open the protected sheets and sidebars of the data menu to display all the tracks with protection yes, click Cancel Click on the protected range and make your edits, and then click Finish to save you can't delete the protected range When you click on the trash can icon next to the description of the range Screenjdown Example of location: Make a copy of the sample worksheet in this tutorial, I covered how to lock cells in Google sheets.
