To pair a new command, go to > Command settings > Right Arrow > Pair Command and follow the instructions in the screen. This article explains how to pair a Roku IR or Remote Point Anywhere automatically, restart or repair a remote, add a new remote, and uncouple a remote. All Roku TVs, transmission rods, and boxes come with wireless remotes. Some Roku commands use IR (Infrared Light) and require a view line to work with a Roku, but do not require pairing. Standard and improved points at any remote point use RF (radio frequency), Bluetooth, or Wi-Fi Direct and do not need a view line. However, they must be paired with a Roku device before they can be used. Press some of the remote control's buttons to see if your ROKU TV or player responds. If you don't, it needs to be paired. If your Roku device comes with an IR controller, insert the batteries (AA or AAA), then point and press the buttons you need to use. No additional pairing is required. The IR commands come, or are compatible, with the following Roku models: Roku LTRoku HD, XD, and XDSRoku N1Roku 1, 2, and 32 HD, XD, and XSRoku Express and Express+PremiereSelect Roku TVs Point Anywhere Standard and Enhanced Remotes are compatible with the Roku Stick and Streaming Stick+, as well as with the Roku 2 (4210), 3, 4, Premiere+, and Ultra. For Roku TVs, the command varies by brand and/or model. If you are setting up a Roku box, stick, or television that comes with a anywhere/altered remote dot for the first time, follow the instructions below. Insert the batteries. Make sure that the Roku TV or it's on. Hold or place the control near the device. The Roku reader or TV will detect the remote control and perform the pairing automatically. If you need to re-pair or restart a Roku control, the process is simple. Disconnect your ROKU device from the power and reconnect it after about five seconds. When the home menu appears on your TV screen, insert the batteries in your remote control, but leave the battery compartment open. Locates the pairing button in the control battery compartment. If there is no gift pairing button, you have a remote standard. After locating the pairing button on your remote control, press and hold the pairing button for three seconds or even see the pairing light on the remote control began to flash. If the indicative light does not blink, try again. If the light still does not blink, try a different set of batteries. Expect thirty seconds while the ROKU device performs the remote pairing process. You should see a message on your TV stating that the pairing was concluded. You can add a new remote control or add a second remote control to control the same Roku TV or player. This is convenient if you have game controls as it will accommodate games of two people in compatible games. In the inside menu, move down to settings in the menu of the category on the left side of the screen. Select the remote. Select the remote pair. The next screen will show the control that is currently paired. Select the right arrow. The next page will provide you with the instructions you need to pair your new remote control. If the pairing does not occur in the first attempt, repeat the steps. Sometimes, unpacking a ROKU remote control can solve problems that you are having with it. The process of unpacking is so easy as pairing. Press simultaneously and keep the buttons Back and Pairing in control for three seconds. The indicator light should flash three times. You can confirm the decompression by pressing some of the remote control buttons to see if your Roku TV or player responds. If I don't, it was unpacked. Thanks for letting us know! Say it.
