Looking at the 2016 line of Panasonic cameras, you will notice that one of them looks really different. There is also a dedicated HDR button, dedicated. Also, it didn't bother to improve the rest of the specs like the 50x optical zoom, the 90x smart zoom and the 1/5.8-inch BSI MOS sensor on the main camera, but it's a new movie feature that's been very popular in recent digital cameras and camcorders – an HDR movie feature. For example, you can have the lens aimed at you effectively by making it a front camera where you can record yourself while you are recording a subject. This secondary camera makes a return to the Panasonic HC-W580K and remains the point of sale for this particular model. As a first-generation model, not everyone was enthusiastic about it, but the Panasonic HC-W580K has some improvements that could encourage people to give a new look to the one-of-a-kind model. You won't find any other Panasonic models in the 2016 series so owners can have some of those rights to brag about knowing that prosumers only have one lens to work with. Panasonic does not explain exactly the meaning of this, but it certainly brings a distinction once you have a complete view of the current family. The video from the secondary camera is shown live on a smaller window in typical picture-in-picture style. The picture-in-picture window is still small, so the 2-megapixel sensor is perfect. Still this secondary physical camera is very flexible and allows you to record the second angle while you have a free hand. HDR is a nice addition. Multi Camera Wireless allows better possibilities of picture-in-picture window. It's the main thing that pushes the price up a bit, but once you've assessed the possibilities, it's a fun feature to have. Perhaps the best thing about this hot new feature is the extra possibility of having two windows This HDR function gives the Panasonic HC-W580K a slight advantage over other entry-level video cameras and the Hybrid O.I.s. With 5 axis correction also contributes to the good total video performance. This is ... It also jumps the price to $399 and you could find a camcorder with better specifications for cheaper so you really need to make sure of this feature. The optics rotate so that you have that second angle is completely optional. This will give you more freedom in recording another angle of view, since it is essentially possible to hand over the smartphone to another person allowing all sorts of creative results. results.
