You will notice that the process is similar to creating a new folder, as you can now rename the zip folder and move it around to different locations on your computer. With the zip file created, you just need to select select select Drag your files into the zip folder. As you can see from the screenshot, the files are copied to the zip folder, and are not moved or deleted from their original location. Now, you can transfer, back up, or do whatever you want with your zipped content. Another way to quickly close some files is to highlight them, right-click and press Send to D|Z|Dn Compressed folder (zipped). The easiest way to decrypt a file is to right-click it and press Extract All. A new window will open and you can select where you want the files to be extracted. By default, it will extract the content to the same directory where your zip file resides. Simply tap the extract and it will create a folder that has all the zip files in it. Advanced Windows Features can easily create zip files and decrypt them, but you'll need a third-party application to do more than that. There are plenty of programs out there that offer extra features for zip files, but one of the lightest, feature-rich, and efficient is 7-Zip. 7-Zip is a free file archiver for Windows that comes with all the options you should need for zip files. Click on that link to be taken to your website and download the latest version of the program. Installation is simple, accept the license agreement and click next until 7-Zip is installed. After that, you should be able to highlight the files, right click, and add them to a zip file with 7-Zip. When you click on "Add to File" you will be presented with a lot of options. Let's go through what each of these means, and why they might come in handy. Encryption of Zip Files This would be useful when you don't want someone without proper authentication to see the files in your zip file. Remember to use a strong password, so the brute force attacks and 652-SEA 652-SEA y otpyrCpiZ ertne rigele sjÁrdop .jz7 ed aicnerefid a( piz ovihcra nu raerc rop satpo iS á 652-SEA .sv otpyrCpiZ .selitʼÁni nelevu es ZipCrypto is weak but has less compatibility problems. AES-256 is much stronger but it only works with newer systems (or with those with 7-Zip installed). Try to choose AES-256 whenever possible. Encrypt File Names - Sometimes file names can be as important as content within a file. Other times, maybe not. If you need to encrypt your file names, so it's impossible for someone to see what kind of files are in your file, you'll need to use the 7z file extension instead of the zipper. This may be a problem, because you need 7-Zip to open 7z files, and what if the receiver does not have 7-Zip? That problem can be solved by creating a self-extracting file, giving it the best of both worlds. If, for some reason, NEEED uses a .zip extension, and NEEED file encryption, it will only have to be established with unencrypted file names. If you use the 7z file format, the "Encrypt file names" checkbox will appear. Self-extraction Files (SFX) A self-extraction file is just a regular zip file, but with a .exe file extension. Running the file will automatically start the extraction process. Advantages - There are two great advantages for self-extraction files. First, you can use the .7z file extension function of encrypted file names. Second, the receiver does not need any special software to open the file. Double-click the .exe, click the extract, and it is finished deciphering the files. Disadvantages - People will not be too eager to open an executable email attachment. If you are using 7-Zip to file some files and send them to a person who does not know very well, they might be tired of opening the file, and your antivirus may even issue a warning.
