In this case, the entire backup process will be completed in two steps: First Iperius will create the image of the drive at the destination of the element, then the backup of the image is copied to other destinations, such as LTO tape drives, other computers on the network, NAS Devices, Amazon S3, etc. Finally, this option can also be used to keep multiple copies, simply adding a destination to the same folder in the "Destinations" panel and choosing the amount of copies to keep. N.B: To avoid keeping duplicate folders that contain the same backup of the image (in fact, Windows creates a folder called with a time mark every time), you must enable synchronization. In the image below, let's see how to configure, as an example, Amazon S3 as a destination: as you can easily see, when you add an additional destination, the type of backup is set in "Create a complete Backup every time ... and cannot be modified. This is because the backup of the image will always appear as a full backup, which mainly consists of the disk image file, so even your copy in an additional destination should be a copy of the entire file. In the following panels, you can configure the programming and email notifications, run the backup on specific days and schedules and always report on the result of the backup and possible errors. You can also configure external processes to run before and after backup. In the final panel, specify the name of the backup work and click OK to save it. Once your new backup work is on the list, you can execute it immediately by right clicking. At the backup destination, Iperius will create a folder\Windowsimagebackup, where it will save the large image file that contains the entire system disk. During the restoration process, it will be very easy to select that folder to rewrite the image file on a new album. In comparison with the back copy of the Windows image, Iperius adds many important characteristics. You have greater control in the process and its verification, you can copy it to several destinations (such as LTO tape drives), you can receive email notifications and configure a detailed programming. Therefore better control, better safety, and greater flexibility. The recovery process for a system image backup is even simpler. To see how to do it, read this tutorial. The image backup of the system is available from € 29 for workstations (Desktop Edition) and from just € 69 for servers (Essential Edition).
