

Click to prove you're human

Our Think Before You Share campaign aims to help young people understand the harm of sharing explicit images and videos of themselves, and others, and encourage parents and educators to start timely conversations with children and young people. We encourage you to share our campaign using #ThinkBeforeYouShare and by following, liking and sharing the campaign on our social channels.
Getty ImagesProducing, distributing, receiving or possessing an image of sexually explicit content involving a child is illegal in NigeriaNigerians have been warned that sharing images of child pornography is an offence that carries a 14-year jail term after a video alleged to involve schoolchildren went viral.Students from a prestigious school were on a trip to Dubai last month when the alleged incident was filmed.The mother of a 10-year-old says her daughter was coerced to participate.Lagos state government has ordered the school's closure so the "alleged sexual violence case" can be investigated.In a video posted on social media, the mother alleges her daughter was drugged by the male students and accused the school authorities of a cover-up.
Christland Schools, which runs several private primary and secondary schools in Lagos, has denied any wrong-doing, saying it takes its duty of care seriously and would co-operate with any inquiry.BBC Africa Live: Updates from across the continentAccording to the school, it was a game of "Truth or Dare" that involved five out of 76 students attending the World School Games between 8 and 14 March.It said it had informed their parents of the "misconduct" and the students had been reprimanded in accordance with the school's regulations.But the mother of the 10-year-old says she was not told the severity of what happened at first, only finding out later when another parent alerted her to the footage, which has since been widely shared on social media.When she questioned her daughter, she found out the girl had been told not to speak about what had happened: "My daughter was dying in silence and she couldn't speak."She had now been suspended from the school, the mother said.

To crown it all, because we have started confronting them and started telling them we are aware of what happened, they now sent her a suspension letter."According to Lagos state laws, it is illegal for minors to engage in sex and the authorities said they were ensuring that adequate medical and psychological support would be provided.Any image showing sexual explicit conduct involving a child - including "producing, distributing, receiving or possessing" one - was an offence carrying a sentence of 14 years, the Lagos state government said. We know that seeing images and videos of child sexual abuse online is upsetting. But if you stumble across it, report it to us. Reporting is quick, easy and anonymous. It can lead to the removal of criminal content and even the rescue of a child from further abuse. If you'd like to find out what happens with your report, you can leave an email address and request we get in touch. You can confidentially report: Child sexual abuse pictures or videos on the internet. AI, animation, cartoon or 'drawn' child sexual abuse images. To report anything else, please click here. Find out why we talk about reporting child sexual abuse and not child porn or child pornography. Thursday, October 17th 2019 - 15:25 UTC "Welcome to Video" operated on the so-called "dark web", which can only be accessed by special software and is widely used to traffic various illegal content. Britain's National Crime Agency said the "Welcome to Video" site contained 250,000 videos that were downloaded a million times by users across the world. UK and US authorities investigating a "dark web" child pornography site run from South Korea on Wednesday announced the arrest of 337 suspects in 38 countries. Britain's National Crime Agency (NCA) said the "Welcome to Video" site contained 250,000 videos that were downloaded a million times by users across the world. "The website monetized the sexual abuse of children and was one of the first to offer sickening videos for sale using the cryptocurrency bitcoin," the NCA said in a statement. "The arrests were made in 38 countries including the UK, Ireland, America, South Korea, Germany, Spain, Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates, the Czech Republic and Canada." The investigations also involved South Korean National Police and Germany's Federal Criminal Police. In Washington, the US Department of Justice said separately the site operated "the largest child sexual exploitation market by volume of content" when it was taken down. "Welcome to Video" operated on the so-called "dark web", which can only be accessed by special software and is widely used to traffic various illegal content and products. The NCA said seven men have already been convicted in Britain since the first suspect was arrested in 2017. One man "was jailed for 22 years for raping a five-year-old boy and appearing on Welcome to Video sexually abusing three-year-old girls. The collaboration between global law enforcement agencies was sparked by the British investigation." A British scientist for child sex offences, according to the NCA, which deals with serious and organized crime, as well as cybercrime, Matthew Falder was sentenced to 25 years in jail in 2017 after admitting 137 counts of online abuse, including the encouragement of child rape and even the abuse of a baby. The US Justice Department indicted the site's alleged operator - identified as 23-year-old South Korean national Jong Woo Son - on nine counts. "Dark net sites that profit from the sexual exploitation of children are among the most vile and reprehensible forms of criminal behaviour," said US Assistant Attorney General Brian Benckowski. Categories: Politics, International, United States. Films about juvenile sexuality. This category has the following 3 subcategories, out of 3 total. Films about puberty (94 P) Teen sex comedy films (2 C, 121 P) Films about virginity (1 C, 194 P) The following 144 pages are in this category, out of 144 total. This list may not reflect recent changes. A Nos Amours Abzurdah Age of Consent (film) All the Right Noises All Things Fair Amarcord American Pie (film) American Taboo Ava (2017 French film) An Awfully Big Adventure Azhivatha Kolangal The Bill of Jack and Rose Beat Girl Beau Pere Beautiful Kate Blame It on Rio Blockers (film) The Blue Lagoon (1923 film) The Blue Lagoon (1949 film) The Blue Lagoon (1980 film) Blue Lagoon: The Awakening Bully (2010 film) Call Me by Your Name (film) Children's Island (film) Clip (film) Confissões de Adolescente The Crush (1993 film) Deep End (film) Deviant (film) The Diary of a Teenage Girl An Education Endless Love (1981 film) L'Ennuï Eugenio Exploits of a Young Don Juan The Falling (2014 film) The First Time (1969 film) Fish Tank (film) The Flavor of Corn Friday the 13th (1980 film) Géminis Giant Little Ones Girls Can't Swim Go, Go, Second Time Virgin Goodbye First Love The Handmaid Hardcore (1979 film) Havoc (2005 film) Home Before Midnight How to Have Sex The Ice Storm (film) Iduu Kadhal Varum Paruvam It Fell Like Love It Follows Jugnu (1947 film) Ken Park Kids (film) Killer Joe (film) Lady Libertine Last Summer (1969 film) Laynam Lesela (2002 film) Léon: The Professional Little Darlings Little Flames (film) The Little Thief Little Thirteen Lola (1970 film) Lolita (1962 film) Lolita (1997 film) Loving Annabelle Mad Women Making It (film) Maladolescenza Malicious (1973 film) Manhattan (1979 film) Mermmaids (1990 film) Mi Verano con Amanda The Miseducation of Cameron Post (film) Moonlight (2016 film) Naiyaandil Normal Adolescent Behavior Notes on a Scandal (film) OMG 2 Our Time (1974 film) Paglali Ko, Gusto Kong Maging Pornstar Palo Alto (2013 film) Paradise: Hope Pariah (2011 film) Persona (1966 film) Poison Ivy (1992 film) Pretty Baby (1978 film) Princess Cyd Puppylevo (2013 film) Rathinirvedam (1978 film) Rathinirvedam (2011 film) The Reader (2008 film) The Rehearsal (2016 film) Riley (film) Rita, Sue and Bob Too Scarborough (2018 film) Skipped Stars Plums of Beverly Hills Slut in a Good Way SMOOTH Talk Spacked Out Splendor in the Grass Spring Awakening (1924 film) Spring Awakening (1929 film) Srđević (unreleased film) Summer of '42 Summer of 85 Summer Storm (2004 film) Super Dark Times A Swedish Love Story Teenage Caveman (2002 film) Tendres Cousines That's My Boy (2012 film) Therese and Isabelle Thirteen (2003 film) Through My Window (film) Thulluvadho Ilamai Too Young to Love (film) Top Spot Tawehling (film) Toxic (2024 film) Tree of Knowledge (film) The Tribe (2014 film) Turn Me On, Dammit! Twist and Shout (film) Venus (2006 film) The Virgin Suicides (film) Virgins (2018 film) Water Lilies (film) The Way He Looks We (2018 film) Where the Boys Are Wild Reeds Wish You Were Here (1987 film) The Year My Voice Broke Yeh Vaada Raah (film) The Young Graduates Young Hearts (2024 film) The Young Runaways (1968 film) Retrieved from " MICHEL MARTIN, host: I'm Michel Martin and this is TELL ME MORE from NPR News. We wanted to go behind closed doors, as we often do on Mondays. That's where we talk about issues people usually keep private. Today, we want to talk about what was supposed to be a private act that has now been viewed thousands of times online. And this is the point where I have to say that this conversation might not be appropriate for everybody because we are going to talk about the story involving a young girl and sex. A 14-year-old girl in Baltimore was videotaped performing oral sex on another teen, a boy. The tape went viral via Facebook, YouTube and other websites. The video was a top trend on Twitter. Her very angry father has spoken to a local media outlet to say he thinks she was forced into the act and also to take those social media sites to task for failing to take the video down sooner. The issue has brought some very heated discussions online and off, we dare say, about the kind of content that is available online, about parenting, about double standards around boys and girls and sexuality, about race; you name it. We wanted to talk more about some of these issues, so we've gathered a group of women who have unique perspectives about teen sexual behavior and the law and media. Laura Sessions Stepp is the author of "Unhooked: How Young Women Pursue Sex, Delay Love and Lose at Both." She's a longtime former staff writer for the Washington Post, where she covered these issues for many years. Malika Saada Saar is the executive director of the Rebecca Project for Human Rights, which fights, among other things, against the sexual exploitation of women and girls. And BJ Bernstein is a DEFENSE ATTORNEY in private practice. She represented Genarlow Wilson who as a teenager was sentenced to a long prison term for being videotaped in a consensual sexual act with a 15-year-old girl. I welcome you all and I thank you all so much for speaking with us. LAURA SESSIONS STEPP: Thanks for having me. MALIKA SAADA SAAR: Thank you for having me. BJ BERNSTEIN: Hello. It's good to talk about something so important. MARTIN: So Laura, I'll start with you. And I'd just to ask. Actually, I'll ask each of you your reaction when you first heard this story or viewed whatever it is that you viewed of this story. LAURA, STEPP: Yeah. You know, 12 years ago, I wrote a story about an oral sex ring here in Northern Virginia, middle school, white, upper middle class girls and guys getting it on, so to speak. And they weren't the only ones. So the oral sex part of it has just been around with us for a while in all communities and all races and so forth. What struck me about this was the video itself, watching. You know, back then - well, no. Fast forward a couple of years later. You'd get sexting and you'd get messages sent back and forth to each other, but to actually see it on a video, it takes this whole idea of oral sex and photographing that to a whole different level. MARTIN: Well, just to remember - because I remember that story and there was a lot of anger at the story, as I recall. STEPP: Yes, yes. MARTIN: When you reported that these were middle school kids and it was almost like a competitive thing to perform oral sex on as many boys as possible and for as many girls to perform oral sex on them as possible. STEPP: Right. They kept lists, of numbers. Yeah. MARTIN: And the outrage was what? STEPP: Well, first of all, the outrage was that the Washington Post put it on the front page and that they sort of blamed the messenger. That's always the first message. The principal was ultimately asked to leave the school. MARTIN: Bj, I'll go to you because one of the points that Laura makes is, when she's first starting reporting on this, that the videotaping, cell phone pictures and all that, that was not a part of it. The technology wasn't there. If it was, it was too expensive for kids that age to have. Now, it's widely available and the case that you were involved, it involved a consensual sex act at a party with some very serious consequences. So what was your reaction when you saw it, or heard about this? BERNSTEIN: It fits what I'm seeing when I go into schools and I talk to students a great deal and I say to them, you know, hold up your cell phone. That is a de facto evidence machine. They videotape it and they send it to one another and I have to try to drill in their heads - it is against the law. It is child pornography. Not only the people who are in the video, but just sending it along to the next person technically makes you guilty of a crime, although obviously, it's so rampant that it would cripple the criminal court system if we could actually pursue everyone. You have to talk directly to the students and let them know that everything they tape, everything they record can and really may be used against them, not only in a criminal context, but for this young woman, as she gets older, if her real name ever gets out; it follows you a lifetime because of the tracking of social media. MARTIN: Just to clarify one thing. We did reach out to the Baltimore City Police. They told us that none of the lease involved in the video, but has been charged or arrested, but we were investigating the act of videotaping. And I know that laws vary from place to place. But what would be the charge? BERNSTEIN: Right. MARTIN: So tell me, how do you react to that? BERNSTEIN: Well, I think that we don't know the exact content of this. Young women and young men at this age partake consensually in these acts, and the videotaping they do. And so to immediately say it's the boys that need to be protected. I don't know that there's any evidence that she was physically forced into this position, which has happened. But what if it's this gray area, where she felt that that was something that she needed to do to be cool or belong? Does that change your view of it? SAAR: No. Again, because I think my question here was the issue of how we judge her. But I think what's also important to lift up here is that we are in a period of this hypersexualization of very young girls and we have to start to talk about the impact that it has on the girls themselves. And increasingly, they are told through popular culture that their place of power and worth is in their sexualization. And... MARTIN: More so now than before? SAAR: Indeed. And really interesting research is coming forward in terms of what's the impact of that on girls. And what we're seeing is that girls have higher levels of anorexia, eating disorder, emotional developmental issues because of this type of over-sexualization. And so again, I think we really have to talk about it from a place of what are we doing to girls around the impact of over-sexualization. MARTIN: So I'd like to ask in the minute that we have left, where do you want this conversation to go? What do you want to see happen? And, I don't know, Malika, do you want to start? And also, you're also an attorney, as Laura and I are not, but you are as well as BJ, so if you want to bring up the legal aspects of how you think the legal system should treat this, I'd be interested in your perspective as well. SAAR: This is an important conversation to have outside of the courtroom. And again, going back to how do we honor our girls, and if there is this push towards sexualization, that how do we allow our girls to know their place of power outside of that, and how do we make sure that in these situations it is not the Lolita Effect. MARTIN: Okay, but I have to push this - Malika, forgive me for pushing this point, but I think the parents of a lot of young boys today would say that girls are sexually aggressive too. And if they are willing participants in this kind of action, why do you feel that the greater burden should fall on the boys? SAAR: I just don't think... I just think we should question why in this situation where the disproportion judgment on the girl and not both the girl and the boy? MARTIN: But the legal system is attaching greater consequence to the boys. See what I'm saying. What we're talking about here is one thing, but what the legal system is prepared to do is quite another. SAAR: Right. But I think if the folks who did the videotaping were girls, the same thing should be true of what happens to them. In the same case where a young boy who was involved in - a young gay boy who was involved in a sexual act and then committed suicide because he found out that that sexual act was videotaped by a young man and woman, both the young man and woman were held correctly responsible for that act and that was considered to be a criminal act. MARTIN: That case is working its way through the courts. But I do take your point. BJ? BERNSTEIN: Yeah, you know, the answer, unfortunately, I think the criminal justice system is overwhelmed on so many different levels that - and it is absolutely ill-equipped to deal with the explosion of younger and younger sexuality. And so again, it goes into parents and schools dealing with a younger and younger age group, not just sexual conversation but also just this issue of self-respect. And I appreciate what's being said about the young women, but I think also there is an incredible amount of pressure on boys to be sexualized earlier and earlier, which also, you know, ties into the bullying problem, really. We just don't spend enough time with them to get them to realize that they have something to lose in this as well, and that may change their actions. MARTIN: Laura, final thought from you? STEPP: We are rightfully concerned with what goes on outside our home. But most of your listeners what they can do is what's inside their home. If there's a mother and a father, how does the father treat the daughter? And how do those kids see their mother and father treating each other? If it's a divorce situation, how do they see still the parents, now divorced, treating each other? When did they start talking about that? In the end, what we can do most about is what happens within our four walls. MARTIN: Laura Sessions Stepp is the author of "Unhooked: How Young Women Pursue Sex, Delay Love and Lose at Both." Malika Saada Saar is the executive director of the Rebecca Project for Human Rights, which advocates for vulnerable women and girls. Both were here with us in our studio in Washington, D.C. And BJ Bernstein is an attorney in private practice. She has had a number of cases where she's represented young people who were in sexually exploitive situations. She joined us from member station WABE in Atlanta. I thank you all so much for speaking with us. Thanks, Michel. STEPP: Thank you. MARTIN: And that's our program for today. I'm Michel Martin. And this is TELL ME MORE from NPR News. Let's talk more tomorrow. Copyright © 2011 NPR. All rights reserved. Visit our website terms of use and permissions pages at www.npr.org for further information. Accuracy and availability of NPR transcripts may vary. Transcript text may be revised to correct errors or match updates to audio. Audio on npr.org may be edited after its original broadcast or publication. The authoritative record of NPR's programming is the audio record. (Reuters) This story contains disturbing descriptions of the possible online abuse of children:An experienced child exploitation investigator told Reuters he reported 26 accounts on the popular adults-only website OnlyFans to authorities, saying they appeared to contain sexual content featuring underage teen girls. "What is alarming is the scope and scale of it," said Matt W.J. Richardson, head of intelligence at The Canadian Open Source Intelligence Centre. He noted that many accounts featured more than one female who he suspected was underage.Within a day of Dec. 16 report to authorities, all of the accounts had been removed from OnlyFans, said Richardson, whose organization trains law enforcement and government agencies in open source intelligence to help combat crimes such as human trafficking and child exploitation.Richardson said he reported the 26 accounts as containing suspected child sexual abuse material (CSAM) under the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children, the U.S.-based clearinghouse for CSAM-related tips. Some of the accounts were linked to each other through promotional posts, suggesting they may have been controlled by the same person or group, Richardson said.The images in the accounts featured females with physical attributes typical of those under the age of 18, Richardson said. Most had narrow hips and lacked physical maturation, he said. Many had narrow shoulders or appeared to be "well short of five feet tall," he said.Sexually explicit images of minors are banned in most countries, including the U.S., UK, and Canada, and are against OnlyFans rules. On its website, OnlyFans says it prohibits content featuring the exploitation or abuse of anyone under 18, even if it's adults "pretending to be" under 18.The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) told Reuters it could not comment on reports made to its tip line. Richardson said. NCMEC said, it tries to confirm whether reported videos actively host child sexual abuse material or exploitive content. When warranted, it notifies the company hosting the material; it's then up to the company whether to remove or block the content. In addition, all tips are "referred to the appropriate law enforcement agency for possible investigation," NCMEC said.Responding to the findings of this story, an OnlyFans spokesperson said the company has a "zero tolerance approach" to child sexual abuse material on the platform and has "strict onboarding processes to ensure all creators are over the age of 18." OnlyFans works closely with NCMEC to "thoroughly investigate any reports they receive from others about our platform," the spokesperson said.She did not respond to a question about why the 26 accounts were taken down only after Richardson reported them.OnlyFans has said it vets all its content and swiftly removes and reports any suspected child sexual abuse material when detected. The company has a "pre-check team" that uses technology to detect content that's "extremely likely to be a child," CEO Kelly Blair said in a speech in August. OnlyFans invests heavily in content moderation, Blair has said, which allows it to "focus on keeping the community safe and keeping the community for adults only." OnlyFans also says all content is ultimately reviewed by human moderators.The spokesperson noted that OnlyFans itself made 347 reports to NCMEC in 2023, "a number fewer than the millions of instances that are reported by other social media platforms where users can remain anonymous and where content is unmoderated." OnlyFans' 4.1 million content creators typically sell explicit images and videos for a monthly subscription fee, plus one-off payments. The company keeps a fifth of the revenue. The subscriptions often take place paywalls around nearly every OnlyFans account, making the site difficult to search. In a July investigation, Reuters used court records to document 40 complaints to law enforcement by minors and their parents in several countries, including the U.S., UK, and Canada, and are against OnlyFans rules. On its website, OnlyFans says it prohibits content featuring the exploitation or abuse of anyone under 18, even if it's adults "pretending to be" under 18.The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) told Reuters it could not comment on reports made to its tip line. Richardson said. NCMEC said, it tries to confirm whether reported videos actively host child sexual abuse material or exploitive content. When warranted, it notifies the company hosting the material; it's then up to the company whether to remove or block the content. In addition, all tips are "referred to the appropriate law enforcement agency for possible investigation," NCMEC said.Responding to the findings of this story, an OnlyFans spokesperson said the company has a "zero tolerance approach" to child sexual abuse material on the platform and has "strict onboarding processes to ensure all creators are over the age of 18." OnlyFans works closely with NCMEC to "thoroughly investigate any reports they receive from others about our platform," the spokesperson said.She did not respond to a question about why the 26 accounts were taken down only after Richardson reported them.OnlyFans has said it vets all its content and swiftly removes and reports any suspected child sexual abuse material when detected. The company has a "pre-check team" that uses technology to detect content that's "extremely likely to be a child," CEO Kelly Blair said in a speech in August. OnlyFans invests heavily in content moderation, Blair has said, which allows it to "focus on keeping the community safe and keeping the community for adults only." OnlyFans also says all content is ultimately reviewed by human moderators.The spokesperson noted that OnlyFans itself made 347 reports to NCMEC in 2023, "a number fewer than the millions of instances that are reported by other social media platforms where users can remain anonymous and where content is unmoderated." OnlyFans' 4.1 million content creators typically sell explicit images and videos for a monthly subscription fee, plus one-off payments. The company keeps a fifth of the revenue. The subscriptions often take place paywalls around nearly every OnlyFans account, making the site difficult to search. In a July investigation, Reuters used court records to document 40 complaints to law enforcement by minors and their parents in several countries, including the U.S., UK, and Canada, and are against OnlyFans rules. On its website, OnlyFans says it prohibits content featuring the exploitation or abuse of anyone under 18, even if it's adults "pretending to be" under 18.The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) told Reuters it could not comment on reports made to its tip line. Richardson said. NCMEC said, it tries to confirm whether reported videos actively host child sexual abuse material or exploitive content. When warranted, it notifies the company hosting the material; it's then up to the company whether to remove or block the content. In addition, all tips are "referred to the appropriate law enforcement agency for possible investigation," NCMEC said.Responding to the findings of this story, an OnlyFans spokesperson said the company has a "zero tolerance approach" to child sexual abuse material on the platform and has "strict onboarding processes to ensure all creators are over the age of 18." OnlyFans works closely with NCMEC to "thoroughly investigate any reports they receive from others about our platform," the spokesperson said.She did not respond to a question about why the 26 accounts were taken down only after Richardson reported them.OnlyFans has said it vets all its content and swiftly removes and reports any suspected child sexual abuse material when detected. The company has a "pre-check team" that uses technology to detect content that's "extremely likely to be a child," CEO Kelly Blair said in a speech in August. OnlyFans invests heavily in content moderation, Blair has said, which allows it to "focus on keeping the community safe and keeping the community for adults only." OnlyFans also says all content is ultimately reviewed by human moderators.The spokesperson noted that OnlyFans itself made 347 reports to NCMEC in 2023, "a number fewer than the millions of instances that are reported by other social media platforms where users can remain anonymous and where content is unmoderated." OnlyFans' 4.1 million content creators typically sell explicit images and videos for a monthly subscription fee, plus one-off payments. The company keeps a fifth of the revenue. The subscriptions often take place paywalls around nearly every OnlyFans account, making the site difficult to search. In a July investigation, Reuters used court records to document 40 complaints to law enforcement by minors and their parents in several countries, including the U.S., UK, and Canada, and are against OnlyFans rules. On its website, OnlyFans says it prohibits content featuring the exploitation or abuse of anyone under 18, even if it's adults "pretending to be" under 18.The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) told Reuters it could not comment on reports made to its tip line. Richardson said. NCMEC said, it tries to confirm whether reported videos actively host child sexual abuse material or exploitive content. When warranted, it notifies the company hosting the material; it's then up to the company whether to remove or block the content. In addition, all tips are "referred to the appropriate law enforcement agency for possible investigation," NCMEC said.Responding to the findings of this story, an OnlyFans spokesperson said the company has a "zero tolerance approach" to child sexual abuse material on the platform and has "strict onboarding processes to ensure all creators are over the age of 18." OnlyFans works closely with NCMEC to "thoroughly investigate any reports they receive from others about our platform," the spokesperson said.She did not respond to a question about why the 26 accounts were taken down only after Richardson reported them.OnlyFans has said it vets all its content and swiftly removes and reports any suspected child sexual abuse material when detected. The company has a "pre-check team" that uses technology to detect content that's "extremely likely to be a child," CEO Kelly Blair said in a speech in August. OnlyFans invests heavily in content moderation, Blair has said, which allows it to "focus on keeping the community safe and keeping the community for adults only." OnlyFans also says all content is ultimately reviewed by human moderators.The spokesperson noted that OnlyFans itself made 347 reports to NCMEC in 2023, "a number fewer than the millions of instances that are reported by other social media platforms where users can remain anonymous and where content is unmoderated." OnlyFans' 4.1 million content creators typically sell explicit images and videos for a monthly subscription fee, plus one-off payments. The company keeps a fifth of the revenue. The subscriptions often take place paywalls around nearly every OnlyFans account, making the site difficult to search. In a July investigation, Reuters used court records to document 40 complaints to law enforcement by minors and their parents in several countries, including the U.S., UK, and Canada, and are against OnlyFans rules. On its website, OnlyFans says it prohibits content featuring the exploitation or abuse of anyone under 18, even if it's adults "pretending to be" under 18.The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) told Reuters it could not comment on reports made to its tip line. Richardson said. NCMEC said, it tries to confirm whether reported videos actively host child sexual abuse material or exploitive content. When warranted, it notifies the company hosting the material; it's then up to the company whether to remove or block the content. In addition, all tips are "referred to the appropriate law enforcement agency for possible investigation," NCMEC said.Responding to the findings of this story, an OnlyFans spokesperson said the company has a "zero tolerance approach" to child sexual abuse material on the platform and has "strict onboarding processes to ensure all creators are over the age of 18." OnlyFans works closely with NCMEC to "thoroughly investigate any reports they receive from others about our platform," the spokesperson said.She did not respond to a question about why the 26 accounts were taken down only after Richardson reported them.OnlyFans has said it vets all its content and swiftly removes and reports any suspected child sexual abuse material when detected. The company has a "pre-check team" that uses technology to detect content that's "extremely likely to be a child," CEO Kelly Blair said in a speech in August. OnlyFans invests heavily in content moderation, Blair has said, which allows it to "focus on keeping the community safe and keeping the community for adults only." OnlyFans also says all content is ultimately reviewed by human moderators.The spokesperson noted that OnlyFans itself made 347 reports to NCMEC in 2023, "a number fewer than the millions of instances that are reported by other social media platforms where users can remain anonymous and where content is unmoderated." OnlyFans' 4.1 million content creators typically sell explicit images and videos for a monthly subscription fee, plus one-off payments. The company keeps a fifth of the revenue. The subscriptions often take place paywalls around nearly every OnlyFans account, making the site difficult to search. In a July investigation, Reuters used court records to document 40 complaints to law enforcement by minors and their parents in several countries, including the U.S., UK, and Canada, and are against OnlyFans rules. On its website, OnlyFans says it prohibits content featuring the exploitation or abuse of anyone under 18, even if it's adults "pretending to be" under 18.The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) told Reuters it could not comment on reports made to its tip line. Richardson said. NCMEC said, it tries to confirm whether reported videos actively host child sexual abuse material or exploitive content. When warranted, it notifies the company hosting the material; it's then up to the company whether to remove or block the content. In addition, all tips are "referred to the appropriate law enforcement agency for possible investigation," NCMEC said.Responding to the findings of this story, an OnlyFans spokesperson said the company has a "zero tolerance approach" to child sexual abuse material on the platform and has "strict onboarding processes to ensure all creators are over the age of 18." OnlyFans works closely with NCMEC to "thoroughly investigate any reports they receive from others about our platform," the spokesperson said.She did not respond to a question about why the 26 accounts were taken down only after Richardson reported them.OnlyFans has said it vets all its content and swiftly removes and reports any suspected child sexual abuse material when detected. The company has a "pre-check team" that uses technology to detect content that's "extremely likely to be a child," CEO Kelly Blair said in a speech in August. OnlyFans invests heavily in content moderation, Blair has said, which allows it to "focus on keeping the community safe and keeping the community for adults only." OnlyFans also says all content is ultimately reviewed by human moderators.The spokesperson noted that OnlyFans itself made 347 reports to NCMEC in 2023, "a number fewer than the millions of instances that are reported by other social media platforms where users can remain anonymous and where content is unmoderated." OnlyFans' 4.1 million content creators typically sell explicit images and videos for a monthly subscription fee, plus one-off payments. The company keeps a fifth of the revenue. The subscriptions often take place paywalls around nearly every OnlyFans account, making the site difficult to search. In a July investigation, Reuters used court records to document 40 complaints to law enforcement by minors and their parents in several countries, including the U.S., UK, and Canada, and are against OnlyFans rules. On its website, OnlyFans says it prohibits content featuring the exploitation or abuse of anyone under 18, even if it's adults "pretending to be" under 18.The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) told Reuters it could not comment on reports made to its tip line. Richardson said. NCMEC said, it tries to confirm whether reported videos actively host child sexual abuse material or exploitive content. When warranted, it notifies the company hosting the material; it's then up to the company whether to remove or block the content. In addition, all tips are "referred to the appropriate law enforcement agency for possible investigation," NCMEC said.Responding to the findings of this story, an OnlyFans spokesperson said the company has a "zero tolerance approach" to child sexual abuse material on the platform and has "strict onboarding processes to ensure all creators are over the age of 18." OnlyFans works closely with NCMEC to "thoroughly investigate any reports they receive from others about our platform," the spokesperson said.She did not respond to a question about why the 26 accounts were taken down only after Richardson reported them.OnlyFans has said it vets all its content and swiftly removes and reports any suspected child sexual abuse material when detected. The company has a "pre-check team" that uses technology to detect content that's "extremely likely to be a child," CEO Kelly Blair said in a speech in August. OnlyFans invests heavily in content moderation, Blair has said, which allows it to "focus on keeping the community safe and keeping the community for adults only." OnlyFans also says all content is ultimately reviewed by human moderators.The spokesperson noted that OnlyFans itself made 347 reports to NCMEC in 2023, "a number fewer than the millions of instances that are reported by other social media platforms where users can remain anonymous and where content is unmoderated." OnlyFans' 4.1 million content creators typically sell explicit images and videos for a monthly subscription fee, plus one-off payments. The company keeps a fifth of the revenue. The subscriptions often take place paywalls around nearly every OnlyFans account, making the site difficult to search. In a July investigation, Reuters used court records to document 40 complaints to law enforcement by minors and their parents in several countries, including the U.S., UK, and Canada, and are against OnlyFans rules. On its website, OnlyFans says it prohibits content featuring the exploitation or abuse of anyone under 18, even if it's adults "pretending to be" under 18.The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) told Reuters it could not comment on reports made to its tip line. Richardson said. NCMEC said, it tries to confirm whether reported videos actively host child sexual abuse material or exploitive content. When warranted, it notifies the company hosting the material; it's then up to the company whether to remove or block the content. In addition, all tips are "referred to the appropriate law enforcement agency for possible investigation," NCMEC said.Responding to the findings of this story, an OnlyFans spokesperson said the company has a "zero tolerance approach" to child sexual abuse material on the platform and has "strict onboarding processes to ensure all creators are over the age of 18." OnlyFans works closely with NCMEC to "thoroughly investigate any reports they receive from others about our platform," the spokesperson said.She did not respond to a question about why the 26 accounts were taken down only after Richardson reported them.OnlyFans has said it vets all its content and swiftly removes and reports any suspected child sexual abuse material when detected. The company has a "pre-check team" that uses technology to detect content that's "extremely likely to be a child," CEO Kelly Blair said in a speech in August. OnlyFans invests heavily in content moderation, Blair has said, which allows it to "focus on keeping the community safe and keeping the community for adults only." OnlyFans also says all content is ultimately reviewed by human moderators.The spokesperson noted that OnlyFans itself made 347 reports to NCMEC in 2023, "a number fewer than the millions of instances that are reported by other social media platforms where users can remain anonymous and where content is unmoderated." OnlyFans' 4.1 million content creators typically sell explicit images and videos for a monthly subscription fee, plus one-off payments. The company keeps a fifth of the revenue. The subscriptions often take place paywalls around nearly every OnlyFans account, making the site difficult to search. In a July investigation, Reuters used court records to document 40 complaints to law enforcement by minors and their parents in several countries, including the U.S., UK, and Canada, and are against OnlyFans rules. On its website, OnlyFans says it prohibits content featuring the exploitation or abuse of anyone under 18, even if it's adults "pretending to be" under 18.The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) told Reuters it could not comment on reports made to its tip line. Richardson said. NCMEC said, it tries to confirm whether reported videos actively host child sexual abuse material or exploitive content. When warranted, it notifies the company hosting the material; it's then up to the company whether to remove or block the content. In addition, all tips are "referred to the appropriate law enforcement agency for possible investigation," NCMEC said.Responding to the findings of this story, an OnlyFans spokesperson said the company has a "zero tolerance approach" to child sexual abuse material on the platform and has "strict onboarding processes to ensure all creators are over the age of 18." OnlyFans works closely with NCMEC to "thoroughly investigate any reports they receive from others about our platform," the spokesperson said.She did not respond to a question about why the 26 accounts were taken down only after Richardson reported them.OnlyFans has said it vets all its content and swiftly removes and reports any suspected child sexual abuse material when detected. The company has a "pre-check team" that uses technology to detect content that's "extremely likely to be a child," CEO Kelly Blair said in a speech in August. OnlyFans invests heavily in content moderation, Blair has said, which allows it to "focus on keeping the community safe and keeping the community for adults only." OnlyFans also says all content is ultimately reviewed by human moderators.The spokesperson noted that OnlyFans itself made 347 reports to NCMEC in 2023, "a number fewer than the millions of instances that are reported by other social media platforms where users can remain anonymous and where content is unmoderated." OnlyFans' 4.1 million content creators typically sell explicit images and videos for a monthly subscription fee, plus one-off payments. The company keeps a fifth of the revenue. The subscriptions often take place paywalls around nearly every OnlyFans account, making the site difficult to search. In a July investigation, Reuters used court records to document 40 complaints to law enforcement by minors and their parents in several countries, including the U.S., UK, and Canada, and are against OnlyFans rules. On its website, OnlyFans says it prohibits content featuring the exploitation or abuse of anyone under 18, even if it's adults "pretending to be" under 18.The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) told Reuters it could not comment on reports made to its tip line. Richardson said. NCMEC said, it tries to confirm whether reported videos actively host child sexual abuse material or exploitive content. When warranted, it notifies the company hosting the material; it's then up to the company whether to remove or block the content. In addition, all tips are "referred to the appropriate law enforcement agency for possible investigation," NCMEC said.Responding to the findings of this story, an OnlyFans spokesperson said the company has a "zero tolerance approach" to child sexual abuse material on the platform and has "strict onboarding processes to ensure all creators are over the age of 18." OnlyFans works closely with NCMEC to "thoroughly investigate any reports they receive from others about our platform," the spokesperson said.She did not respond to a question about why the 26 accounts were taken down only after Richardson reported them.OnlyFans has said it vets all its content and swiftly removes and reports any suspected child sexual abuse material when detected. The company has a "pre-check team" that uses technology to detect content that's "extremely likely to be a child," CEO Kelly Blair said in a speech in August. OnlyFans invests heavily in content moderation, Blair has said, which allows it to "focus on keeping the community safe and keeping the community for adults only." OnlyFans also says all content is ultimately reviewed by human moderators.The spokesperson noted that OnlyFans itself made 347 reports to NCMEC in 2023, "a number fewer than the millions of instances that are reported by other social media platforms where users can remain anonymous and where content is unmoderated." OnlyFans' 4.1 million content creators typically sell explicit images and videos for a monthly subscription fee, plus one-off payments. The company keeps a fifth of the revenue. The subscriptions often take place paywalls around nearly every OnlyFans account, making the site difficult to search. In a July investigation, Reuters used court records to document 40 complaints to law enforcement by minors and their parents in several countries, including the U.S., UK, and Canada, and are against OnlyFans rules. On its website, OnlyFans says it prohibits content featuring the exploitation or abuse of anyone under 18, even if it's adults "pretending to be" under 18.The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) told Reuters it could not comment on reports made to its tip line. Richardson said. NCMEC said, it tries to confirm whether reported videos actively host child sexual abuse material or exploitive content. When warranted, it notifies the company hosting the material; it's then up to the company whether to remove or block the content. In addition, all tips are "referred to the appropriate law enforcement agency for possible investigation," NCMEC said.Responding to the findings of this story, an OnlyFans spokesperson said the company has a "zero tolerance approach" to child sexual abuse material on the platform and has "strict onboarding processes to ensure all creators are over the age of 18." OnlyFans works closely with NCMEC to "thoroughly investigate any reports they receive from others about our platform," the spokesperson said.She did not respond to a question about why the 26 accounts were taken down only after Richardson reported them.OnlyFans has said it vets all its content and swiftly removes and reports any suspected child sexual abuse material when detected. The company has a "pre-check team" that uses technology to detect content that's "extremely likely to be a child," CEO Kelly Blair said in a speech in August. OnlyFans invests heavily in content moderation, Blair has said, which allows it to "focus on keeping the community safe and keeping the community for adults only." OnlyFans also says all content is ultimately reviewed by human moderators.The spokesperson noted that OnlyFans itself made 347 reports to NCMEC in 2023, "a number fewer than the millions of instances that are reported by other social media platforms where users can remain anonymous and where content is unmoderated." OnlyFans' 4.1 million content creators typically sell explicit images and videos for a monthly subscription fee, plus one-off payments. The company keeps a fifth of the revenue. The subscriptions often take place paywalls around nearly every OnlyFans account, making the site difficult to search. In a July investigation, Reuters used court records to document 40 complaints to law enforcement by minors and their parents in several countries, including the U.S., UK, and Canada, and are against OnlyFans rules. On its website, OnlyFans says it prohibits content featuring the exploitation or abuse of anyone under 18, even if it's adults "pretending to be" under 18.The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) told Reuters it could not comment on reports made to its tip line. Richardson said. NCMEC said, it tries to confirm whether reported videos actively host child sexual abuse material or exploitive content. When warranted, it notifies the company hosting the material; it's then up to the company whether to remove or block the content. In addition, all tips are "referred to the appropriate law enforcement agency for possible investigation," NCMEC said.Responding to the findings of this story, an OnlyFans spokesperson said the company has a "zero tolerance approach" to child sexual abuse material on the platform and has "strict onboarding processes to ensure all creators are over the age of 18." OnlyFans works closely with NCMEC to "thoroughly investigate any reports they receive from others about our platform," the spokesperson said.She did not respond to a question about why the 26 accounts were taken down only after Richardson reported them.OnlyFans has said it vets all its content and swiftly removes and reports any suspected child sexual abuse material when detected. The company has a "pre-check team" that uses technology to detect content that's "extremely likely to be a child," CEO Kelly Blair said in a speech in August. OnlyFans invests heavily in content moderation, Blair has said, which allows it to "focus on keeping the community safe and keeping the community for adults only." OnlyFans also says all content is ultimately reviewed by human moderators.The spokesperson noted that OnlyFans itself made 347 reports to NCMEC in 2023, "a number fewer than the millions of instances that are reported by other social media platforms where users can remain anonymous and where content is unmoderated." OnlyFans' 4.1 million content creators typically sell explicit images and videos for a monthly subscription fee, plus one-off payments. The company keeps a fifth of the revenue. The subscriptions often take place paywalls around nearly every OnlyFans account, making the site difficult to search. In a July investigation, Reuters used court records to document 40 complaints to law enforcement by minors and their parents in several countries, including the U.S., UK, and Canada, and are against OnlyFans rules. On its website, OnlyFans says it prohibits content featuring the exploitation or abuse of anyone under 18, even if it's adults "pretending to be" under 18.The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) told Reuters it could not comment on reports made to its tip line. Richardson said. NCMEC said, it tries to confirm whether reported videos actively host child sexual abuse material or exploitive content. When warranted, it notifies the company hosting the material; it's then up to the company whether to remove or block the content. In addition, all tips are "referred to the appropriate law enforcement agency for possible investigation," NCMEC said.Responding to the findings of this story, an OnlyFans spokesperson said the company has a "zero tolerance approach" to child sexual abuse material on the platform and has "strict onboarding processes to ensure all creators are over the age of 18." OnlyFans works closely with NCMEC to "thoroughly investigate any reports they receive from others about our platform," the spokesperson said.She did not respond to a question about why the 26 accounts were taken down only after Richardson reported them.OnlyFans has said it vets all its content and swiftly removes and reports any suspected child sexual abuse material when detected. The company has a "pre-check team" that uses technology to detect content that's "extremely likely to be a child," CEO Kelly Blair said in a speech in August. OnlyFans invests heavily in content moderation, Blair has said, which allows it to "focus on keeping the community safe and keeping the community for adults only." OnlyFans also says all content is ultimately reviewed by human moderators.The spokesperson noted that OnlyFans itself made 347 reports to NCMEC in 2023, "a number fewer than the millions of instances that are reported by other social media platforms where users can remain anonymous and where content is unmoderated." OnlyFans' 4.1 million content creators typically sell explicit images and videos for a monthly subscription fee, plus one-off payments. The company keeps a fifth of the revenue. The subscriptions often take place paywalls around nearly every OnlyFans account, making the site difficult to search. In a July investigation, Reuters used court records to document 40 complaints to law enforcement by minors and their parents in several countries, including the U.S., UK, and Canada, and are against OnlyFans rules. On its website, OnlyFans says it prohibits content featuring the exploitation or abuse of anyone under 18, even if it's adults "pretending to be" under 18.The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) told Reuters it could not comment on reports made to its tip line. Richardson said. NCMEC said, it tries to confirm whether reported videos actively host child sexual abuse material or exploitive content. When warranted, it notifies the company hosting the material; it's then up to the company whether to remove or block the content. In addition, all tips are "referred to the appropriate law enforcement agency for possible investigation," NCMEC said.Responding to the findings of this story, an OnlyFans spokesperson said the company has a "zero tolerance approach" to child sexual abuse material on the platform and has "strict onboarding processes to ensure all creators are over the age of 18." OnlyFans works closely with NCMEC to "thoroughly investigate any reports they receive from others about our platform," the spokesperson said.She did not respond to a question about why the 26 accounts were taken down only after Richardson reported them.OnlyFans has said it vets all its content and swiftly removes and reports any suspected child sexual abuse material when detected. The company has a "pre-check team" that uses technology to detect content that's "extremely likely to be a child," CEO Kelly Blair said in a speech in August. OnlyFans invests heavily in content moderation, Blair has said, which allows it to "focus on keeping the community safe and keeping the community for adults only." OnlyFans also says all content is ultimately reviewed by human moderators.The spokesperson noted that OnlyFans itself made 347 reports to NCMEC in 2023, "a number fewer than the millions of instances that are reported by other social media platforms where users can remain anonymous and where content is unmoderated." OnlyFans' 4.1 million content creators typically sell explicit images and videos for a monthly subscription fee, plus one-off payments. The company keeps a fifth of the revenue. The subscriptions often take place paywalls around nearly every OnlyFans account, making the site difficult to search. In a July investigation, Reuters used court records to document 40 complaints to law enforcement by minors and their parents in several countries, including the U.S., UK, and Canada, and are against OnlyFans rules. On its website, OnlyFans says it prohibits content featuring the exploitation or abuse of anyone under 18, even if it's adults "pretending to be" under 18.The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC) told Reuters it could not comment on reports made to its tip line. Richardson said. NCMEC said, it tries to confirm whether reported videos actively host child sexual abuse material or exploitive content. When warranted, it notifies the company hosting the material; it's then up to the company whether to remove or block the content. In addition, all tips are "referred to the appropriate law enforcement agency for possible investigation," NCMEC said.Responding to the findings of this story, an OnlyFans spokesperson said the company has a "zero tolerance approach" to child sexual abuse material on the platform and has "strict onboarding processes to ensure all creators are over the age of 18." OnlyFans works closely with NCMEC to "thoroughly investigate any reports they receive from others about our platform," the spokesperson said.She did not respond to a question about why the