Trench Foot
Trench foot is a condition caused by prolonged exposure to wet and cold conditions. It is characterized by swelling, pain, and discoloration of the feet. It was a common problem for soldiers in WWI trenches. The condition was often treated by drying the feet and providing warm clothing. In severe cases, amputation was necessary.

These were meant to protect the soldiers' feet from the water in the trenches to try and prevent Trench Foot. The World War I trenches could stretch for many miles and made it almost impossible for one side to advance on the other. Neither side made much ground for nearly three and a half years - from October 1914 to March of 1918.
