Technically, this storm was a non-factor hurricane. During his investigation, he spoke with Bob Case, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Boston during the storm. The case Junger described was the coincidence of three different weather phenomena that came together to create the "perfect situation" for such a storm: hot air, cold flow, and high pressure from a low-pressure system flowing from one direction and high pressure from another direction of tropical moisture that a tropical storm (or hurricane) provides tropical storm focused on using the perfect word created the perfect storm and decided to use the perfect storm as the title of his book.
